Persona test log - Paula

Date: October 24, 2026 Layer: Synthetic persona, Layer 1 Product state: Live deployment 2 at <https://week-11-pulso-epr.vercel.app> Evidence: Reset browser state, phone-width screenshots, accessibility-tree output, and interactive sample flow.

Persona

Paula is an invented 37-year-old packaging-compliance coordinator at a mid-sized cosmetics importer in Guadalajara. She reconciles about 280 SKUs quarterly across sales exports, supplier PDFs, email, and a consultant. She is comfortable with spreadsheets but distrusts opaque ROI claims and stops using a tool when an estimate looks like a fact. She must explain any purchase to finance and refuses to certify something she cannot defend.

No real person, company, or personal data was used.

Task

Paula was asked to answer one question: “With the information visible here, which operating routes deserve a real quotation or second-cycle test?” She was not asked to choose a vendor, certify compliance, or estimate environmental impact.

Walkthrough and narrated hesitation

Screen 1 - Promise and limits

> “I understand the job: measure before buying. The red warning tells me this does not certify anything. I would continue because it does not ask for an account or a file.”

Observed: Strong comprehension. “Adapta antes de inventar” matches Paula's procurement concern. The no-account/no-file line reduces fear of exposing company records.

Screen 2 - Cycle inputs and phone sensor

> “I know our SKU count and consultant fee. ‘Evidence complete’ worries me because that percentage is my estimate, not a verified audit. The simulated feed is obvious. I do not understand why movement matters, but it is optional.”

Confusions logged:

1. `Evidencia completa` could be mistaken for verified completeness, though the panel labels the inputs `Declarado por ti`.
2. Device-motion sampling has weak commercial meaning for Paula; its optional status prevents it from blocking the task.
3. The timer and checkpoint counter are more credible signals than movement and should remain primary.

Decision: Keep motion optional and subordinate. A real pilot should remove it unless observation proves incremental value.

Screen 3 - Synthetic projection

> "I can see the range and that the model is synthetic, but the section title almost disappears on my phone. If I miss the title, I may not understand that this is a projection step."

Critical confusion: The dark full-bleed background was behind the page's stacking context. On the tested phone viewport, the white section heading rendered against the ivory page and lost contrast. This was the highest-severity issue because it obscured both sequence and caution.

Fix: Isolate the projection section's stacking context so its navy background reliably sits behind the white heading and cards at every breakpoint.

Screen 4 - Route comparison

> "The partner platform has a green border. Even though the text says 'pasa para investigar,' green can feel like the product is recommending it. I need a sentence I can repeat to finance."

Confusion: A visually eligible route could be read as a product recommendation.

Fix: Change the verdict to "Pasa el filtro | no es recomendación." Preserve the estimated-data badge and "Por comprobar" line.

Screen 5 - Shadow and export

> "The blocked claims are clear. I like that paper evidence is protected. The checkbox says I reviewed assumptions, and the sentence above says I am not approving compliance. I can export this as a discussion record."

Observed: The review gate distinguishes assumption review from legal approval. Export remains disabled until checked and contains aggregate fields only.

Confusion log

Severity	Confusion	Resolution
Critical	White projection heading lacked reliable contrast on phone.	Fixed stacking context; visually retested.
High	Green eligible card could feel like a recommendation.	Verdict now says “no es recomendación.”
Medium	Self-declared completeness could feel verified.	Existing `Declarado por ti` label retained; future pilot tests alternative wording.
Low	Motion sampling lacks a clear procurement use.	Kept optional and subordinate; identified as a kill candidate.
Low	Human checkbox might feel like certification.	Existing copy explicitly limits it to assumptions, not compliance or impact.

Retest

- The projection heading now sits on the navy background at phone width.
- The route card says “Pasa el filtro | no es recomendación.”
- The critical task remains completable without motion permission.
- Synthetic/model labels remain present after the changes.
- The review gate remains disabled until explicitly checked.

Outcome

Paula can identify a route that merits investigation without confusing it with a vendor recommendation or a compliance decision. The persona test does not validate the product with a real buyer. The next honest test is a moderated session with a packaging-compliance lead using comparable aggregate records from two cycles.
